Dear Hiring Team,

A trading platform has no weekend. When it goes down on a Sunday at 2 AM, the person responsible cannot offer excuses; they offer a fix. For eleven years I was that person: leading Level 2 support for six international brokerage platforms, where a production issue meant frozen client money until it was solved. Your listing describes the platform I have spent my career running: fintech, payment infrastructure, data, cloud, security, and reliability on a 24/7 schedule. I led the team that kept those systems available, managed incident response and disaster recovery, integrated payment gateways for enterprise clients, and enforced anti-fraud, AML, and KYC controls that kept regulators calm. I then carried the same discipline into building: Srabutan.com, an end-to-end marketplace with Xendit payment flows, and AI and automation workflows that cut manual processing by 70 percent. My path to technology leadership runs through operations, not product management. That is not a caveat; it is the profile your JD emphasizes: delivery predictability, system availability, operational ownership, security, and compliance. I build engineering accountability the same way I build platform reliability: clear ownership, honest post-mortems, and automation over heroics. I am Jakarta-based and ready for hybrid work. If your fintech needs a CTO who has already carried a 24/7 financial platform through every kind of bad Monday, I would welcome a conversation.

Warm regards,
