Hiring Manager

Hiring Team

PT Rakamin Kolektif Madani

Dear Hiring Team,

The hardest part of a software engagement is not the build. It is the moment a client's people decide whether what you delivered is theirs or yours. I have led that moment many times, and it is the part of product work I love most. My path is operator-first: I have shipped and run my own B2B and B2C platforms end to end, from first conversation through scope, build, launch, and adoption. For my e-commerce and marketplace products I wrote the specifications, made the trade-off calls when scope met reality, led the demos, and owned the numbers after go-live. I read messy enterprise data for a living, and I use AI as leverage across the whole job, from analysis to prototyping. What I bring to your engagements is the discipline of locked scope and honest reporting: weekly cadences that propose the next move, feasibility checked before anything is promised, and change requests decided with impact assessments, not optimism. I have trained and coached teams across many countries, so growing a Product Consultant into this seat is work I would enjoy doing deliberately. I speak the client's language in Bahasa Indonesia and English, and I bring a portfolio of shipped interfaces and workflows I can walk you through, with the mental models behind each one. I would welcome the opportunity to discuss how I can help your engagements ship products clients actually adopt. Warm regards, Bio Lumbantoruan
